History

Bangor University was founded in 1884 in Bangor, Wales. The university, which is located in the north-west of London, is home to approximately 2,500 students from over 100 different nations. The university is one of the country's oldest educational institutions.

Bangor University has been dedicated to academic achievement for almost 135 years. They are one of the most prestigious educational institutions in the United Kingdom, providing degrees. Because of its unique location on the coast, the university is a good place to study Ocean Science.

However, the university has grown in popularity as a result of its other disciplines, including Electronic Engineering, Sports Science, and Accounting and Finance. International students can take use of free English education and support at the university, which include classes in English vocabulary and grammar as well as business English.

They also provide drop-in sessions for students who require quick assistance, as well as English writing advice. There are around 150 groups and clubs at the university. All students have the ability to participate in its societies and clubs because they are free to join.

Most university degrees allow students to combine a placement year or abroad experience to gain valuable employment skills.

With a 14 percent international student ratio, the international cost for students coming to study from overseas is expected to be between £12,500 and 15,300.
